A FEW DAYS LATER....
I WANT TO THANK YOU FOR GETTING OUR LOVESICK COMPUTER BACK EVEN THOUGH HE TAKES WEEKENDS OFF NOW.
WHERE DOES HE SPEND HIS WEEKENDS?
WITH HIS GIRLFRIEND, THE BANK VAULT! WE HAVE TO GIVE HER WEEKENDS OFF TOO.
WE EVEN HAD TO USE THE LEG MACHINE TO GIVE THE VAULT LEGS.
IT'S A GOOD THING THAT MACHINE'S EFFECTS ARE ONLY TEMPORARY ON HUMANS.
I WONDER WHAT ROMEO SAW IN THAT BANK VAULT.
I KNOW. HE TOLD ME.
"HIS MOTHER ALWAYS SAID TO MARRY A RICH GIRL."

Some Smiles

"Every publisher thinks about having a book that will sell in the millions in a hardcover edition; more millions in a paperback edition; and then hit the movies. First of all you need a topic that will appeal to the widest variety of readers. Next you need a title that will tempt the potential buyer to part with his cash.

We had room for one more book on our spring list. But what was it to cover? And who would write it? In fact, the more I thought about it, the more I was convinced I should go about it in a sort of backward movement. That is, come up with the title first. Then give it to one of our leading writers and tell him to produce this new best seller.

I had a new assistant fresh out of college. So I explained some things to him.

"Take the subject of Washington. If you have that in your title, you will have a good seller in the early history of our country. It will appeal to a lot of people. Then take the topic of Mother. Everyone has a mother whether living or dead. Put the word mother in your title and you do have a sentimental appeal to a lot of folks. Or consider the field of psychology, and we have the topic of dreams. Put dream in your title, and you should sell a lot of books. Now think up a good title for me."

Know what he comes up with? This one: "Washington's Mother's Dream." But who can write such a book?

•••••••••

In my personal opinion, New York City is unique. Things do happen there that just can't seem to take place in any other city in the world. This particular incident took place on the Staten Island Ferry. You can now get to Staten Island without using a ferry. You start from Manhattan, use the bridge or tunnel to Brooklyn, and then the bridge to Staten Island.

But that ferry ride is still the cheapest boat ride in the entire country. On this particular day, I noticed a young man seated next to an old man. They were on the seats next to the boat railings. The young man was doing the talking.

"That is the Statue of Liberty—a gift to the country from France. I must take you there one day. A special boat runs to it with visitors. Now look over there. See the small boat? It is a fishing boat—takes people out for a day's trip. They hope to catch some fish. I hope some day to take you out on it. Won't make much difference whether or not we catch some fish. Look at that island over there. That is Governor's Island. I have a friend over there. So maybe one day the two of us will go and visit it.

Over there is a land fill. I understand they are going to build a very large apartment complex on it."

And so it went. The young man doing the explaining. What a wonderful world it still was. The young man arose and he faced me. I spoke to him.

"See you have a visitor to the city. Nice to show him around."

"The other way around," he smiled. "My first time here. My Uncle has lived here all his life. Never made this trip before."

•••••••

It was the opening day at the big reservoir for fishermen. John and the other boys in the area had been busy for the previous week looking for worms—thin worms, fat worms, short worms, long worms, any kind of a worm would do. At least that is what the boys thought. They were up bright and early, and each boy staked out an area for his sales possibilities.

"Get your worms right now. Only forty cents a box. Get them now. Supply is limited," that is the way most of the boys tended to hawk their wares. By one—the boys took time out to eat the lunches mothers had prepared—they were aware that this venture into business had been a failure. All were ready to quit except John. In his pocket he had his week's allowance.

"Don't throw the worms away," he told his friends. "I will buy them at five cents for two boxes."

So the boys sold him their products and left the reservoir. Then John went into action.

"Get your educated worms from me. They will get the fish to bite. Only 25 cents a dozen now. When the fish start biting, they will be 75 cents a dozen. Don't pass up this opportunity."

P.S.: He sold every worm he had!
